Located between Bordeaux and Saint-Emilion, Château La France belongs to the largest estates in the Bordeaux Supérieur area since the End of the Second Empire.

In the heart of the estate, a château from the Restauration Period was erected at the exact place of a former Gallo Roman Villa. In 1635, under the reign of Louis XIII, the château was owned by the Quinsac Family, Royal Notaries of Bordeaux. Destroyed during the French revolution, the Château was rebuilt in its current style by wine merchants from Bordeaux. Until 1930, the estate was named Chateau Quinsac, since then the name of Chateau La France has been succeeded.

The Mottet Family bought the Chateau in 2009 and since this date keeps on improving the quality of their wines, regularly awarded prestigious medals.

A monumental sculpture of a cock, 12 m high, created by the Artist Georges Saulterre, has been erected in the heart of the vineyard. To honour it the CUVÉE GALLUS has been created as of vintage 2009.
